Mississippi People's Movement

Major Takeaways

Communities need investments in capacity

Climate 101 education is essential and lacking

Trusted messengers go a long way

The importance of technological interventions— from solar to carbon capture– make sense when put in context

Long-term visioning work enables short-term planning

What makes this work complex?

Successes:

- Investment in climate progress
- Successful convening
- High levels of motivation
- Desire to learn from trusted experts

Challenges:

- Trauma with past partners
- Horizontal leadership structure
- Organizational discipline
- Constant crisis

What does an explicit EJ role allow for?

- A dedicated voice thinking about uplifting and supporting community interests
- Expertise around philosophies and worldviews held by progressive community groups
- Imagination and visioning
- Clear communication to the non-technical public
- Bridges between GPI teams

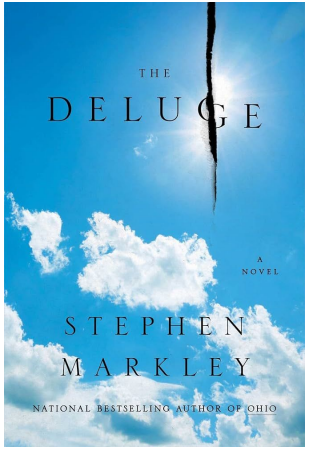

Next Steps

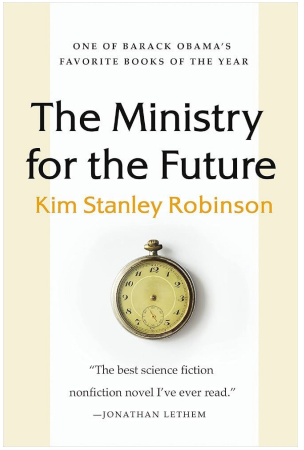

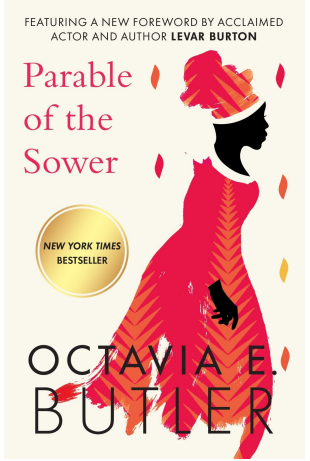

- Video + Blog post coming out about CLC
- Building out a Just Transition Plan
  - Focus on industrial decarbonization
- Resources for developers around good community engagement
- Connecting MPM with experts and resources

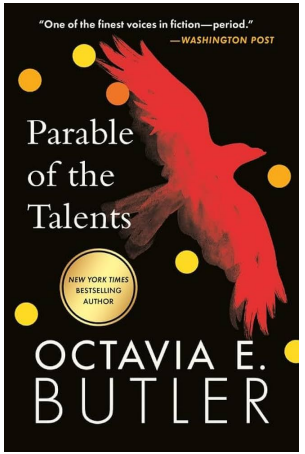

Questions to consider

- What does it look like to build community capacity? How can we move resources to make this happen?
- How does justice work look as an:
  - internal practice (personal)
  - organizational practice (for GPI), and
  - social practice (our partners & planet)
- What is the ideal we are striving towards? How do we enable it?

Thank you!
